ABSTRACT

In Austria, the level of perceived independence of the judiciary among the general public continues to be very high and the overall efficiency of the justice system remains high as well. There have been no steps to introduce systematic judicial involvement in the appointment of administrative court (vice-)presidents. The establishment of an independent Federal Prosecution Office has not advanced so far, though the Government programme commits to take such a reform forward and legal drafts are being prepared. Certain reporting obligations of the prosecution service remain high, and the Minister of Justice continues to make use of the right to instruct prosecutors in individual cases within the existing legal framework, further underlying the need for a reform of the system. Resources allocated to the justice system allow for posts to be filled, while needs for additional posts for judges have been identified. Digitalisation of justice continues to advance, and the compulsory online publication of judgments has been expanded to the Higher Regional Courts. A reform of the system of evaluation of judges to introduce a more feedback-based system is being discussed. Court fees in specific contexts continue to be high and the Constitutional Court found a restriction on access to legal aid in the Administrative Procedural Code to be unconstitutional.

The National Anti-Corruption Strategy and the 2023-2025 Action Plans are being implemented. Investigations in high-level corruption cases continue, while prosecutors can still face intense scrutiny with regard to specific cases. Work on an asset declaration system and Code of Conduct for Ministers, as well as new rules for Members of Cabinet, is ongoing. First discussions are taking place on an asset and interests regime for Members of Parliament. The establishment of a publicly accessible register of parliamentary groups strengthened transparency, and web-based reporting channels for whistleblowers are reported to function well. The lobbying framework and rules on revolving doors remain limited in scope. The Court of Audit performed new tasks in line with its extended mandate. Measures to mitigate corruption risks in public procurement, which is seen as an area at high risk of corruption, continue.

The media regulator continues to operate independently. While funding for quality journalism is having a positive impact, the economic situation of media business operators deteriorates. There have been limited steps to address the proper implementation and enforcement of fair distribution of state advertising. Following a Constitutional Court ruling, the rules on the management bodies of the public service broadcaster were amended to increase the independence of these bodies. Measures continue to address challenges regarding the safety of journalists.

The Ombudsman Board, which is the National Human Rights Institution, functions effectively and the nomination procedure for its members is set to be strengthened. The Government has committed in its programme to transparency and objectivity with respect to appointments to high-level positions at independent authorities, which remains an area susceptible to politicisation. The implementation of the recent reform of the tax framework for civil society organisations has shown positive results.

RECOMMENDATIONS

Overall, concerning the recommendations in the 2024 Rule of Law Report, Austria has made:

- No progress on addressing the need for involvement of the judiciary in the procedures for appointment of court presidents of administrative courts, taking into account European standards on judicial appointments and the selection of court presidents.
- Limited progress on taking forward the reform to establish an independent Federal Prosecution Office, taking into account European standards on the independence and autonomy of the prosecution, including to ensure the independent operation of the specialised anti-corruption prosecution.
- Limited progress on introducing effective rules on assets and interests' declaration for Members of Parliament, including effective monitoring and sanctioning mechanisms.
- No progress on adopting a legislative proposal to strengthen the framework on lobbying, including the transparency register.
- Limited progress on taking steps to ensure proper implementation and enforcement as regards the fair distribution of state advertising.

On this basis, and considering other developments that took place in the period of reference, it is recommended to Austria to:

- Address the need for involvement of the judiciary in the procedures for appointment of court presidents of administrative courts, taking into account European standards on judicial appointments and the selection of court presidents.
- Take forward the reform to establish an independent Federal Prosecution Office, taking into account European standards on the independence and autonomy of the prosecution, including to ensure the independent operation of the specialised anti-corruption prosecution.
- Take forward efforts to introduce effective rules on assets and interests' declaration for Members of Parliament, including effective monitoring and sanctioning mechanisms.
- Adopt a legislative proposal to strengthen the framework on lobbying, including the transparency register.
- Take steps to ensure proper implementation and enforcement as regards the fair distribution of state advertising.

I. JUSTICE SYSTEM¹

Independence

The level of perceived judicial independence in Austria continues to be very high among the general public and is now high among companies. Overall, 86% of the general population and 71% of companies perceived the level of independence of courts and judges to be ‘fairly or very good’ in 2025². The perceived judicial independence among the general public has increased in comparison with 2024 (82%) and has slightly increased in comparison with 2021 (84%). The perceived judicial independence among companies has decreased in comparison with 2024 (77%), as well as in comparison with 2021 (78%).

There has been no progress on the recommendation to address the need for systematic judicial involvement in appointment of administrative court (vice-)presidents³. Administrative court (vice-)presidents at the eleven administrative first instance courts continue to be appointed through a variety of procedures, without consistent judicial involvement and without a clear requirement to be selected among already appointed judges⁴, which raises concerns with respect to European standards⁵. A reflection process by the conference of presidents of the first instance administrative courts initiated in 2024 did not lead to any operational conclusions⁶. Stakeholders have reiterated concerns about the existing system and point to the upcoming end of terms of the president of the Supreme Administrative Court and the vice-president at of Federal Administrative Court⁷. The Government programme commits to transparent and merit-based appointments, while allocating the right to make proposals for certain high-level positions in the judiciary to specific members of the Government⁸. In this light, no progress has been made on the recommendation.

There has been limited progress on the recommendation to establish an independent Federal Prosecution Office, as the Government programme commits to taking forward such a reform⁹. The independent committee set up to investigate allegations of (attempted)

The level of perceived judicial independence is categorised as follows: very low (below 30% of respondents perceive judicial independence as fairly good and very good); low (between 30-39%), average (between 40-59%), high (between 60-75%), very high (above 75%).

⁹ The 2024 Rule of Law Report recommended Austria to “[t]ake forward the reform to establish an independent Federal Prosecution Office, taking into account European standards on the independence and political influence in the judiciary¹⁰ presented its final report in July 2024, concluding that there had been clear instances of attempts to influence prosecutorial action on political grounds, notably in high-profile cases, linked also to the extensive system of oversight and reporting to the Ministry of Justice¹¹. It recommended again to increase the independence of the prosecution by establishing a Federal Prosecution Office independent from the executive. The new Government programme presented in March 2025 includes a commitment to create an independent Federal Prosecution Office as a collegiate body supervising the prosecution services¹². Draft legislation is in preparation, as the project requires a constitutional change and multiple legal adjustments. Stakeholders generally welcome this, but voice concerns related to the design of the mechanism of parliamentary control, as the Government programme does not explicitly exclude oversight by Parliament over ongoing cases¹³. According to European standards, regular reporting of the prosecution service should not extend to an obligation to report to Parliament on the details of individual cases¹⁴. In view of the political commitment in the Government programme, limited progress has been made on the recommendation.

Certain reporting obligations of the prosecution service remain high, and the Minister of Justice continues to make use of the right to instruct prosecutors in individual cases.

The system of reporting obligations of prosecutors to the senior prosecutors' offices and ultimately to the Ministry of Justice continues to constitute an important burden notably on the Central Public Prosecutor's Office for Combating Economic Crimes and Corruption (WKStA)¹⁵, with the possibilities for reducing it without legislative change having been exhausted¹⁶. As regards the power of the Minister of Justice to issue instructions to prosecutors in individual cases, the 2023 report on instructions (covering only concluded cases) reports 17 instructions between 2017-2023¹⁷. The Council of Directives (Weisungsrat), an independent advisory body to the Minister of Justice examining all instructions in individual cases, examined 31 cases in 2024 in which the Minister intended to issue an instruction¹⁸. This shows that this power continues to be exercised in practice, which, linked with the system of reporting obligations, continues to underline the relevance of the above mentioned reform to establish an independent Federal Prosecution Office. In this respect, the authorities note that reporting obligations and instructions serve to ensure the high quality of the prosecutorial work and are not meant to undermine the independent conduct of the Public Prosecutors' investigations.

Quality

Resources allocated to the justice system currently allow for posts to be filled, while needs for additional posts for judges have been identified. In 2024, Austria was able to increase the proportion of judicial posts filled, despite a significant increase in the overall number of posts, reporting that 99% of posts for judges and court staff and 98% for prosecutors were filled as of January 2025¹⁹. This is linked to various measures to increase the attractiveness of the profession by the Ministry of Justice and the judiciary²⁰. Nevertheless, the Judges' Association, based on the personnel measuring tool of the Ministry of Justice, estimates a need of about 200 additional posts to match an increased workload²¹, which could be achieved by hiring further judges or by increasing the numbers of judicial clerks to support judges²². At the Finance Court, the process to fill vacancies has progressed, although challenges remain to keep pace with the rates of retirements²³. Stakeholders further point to a significant gap between judges' salaries and pensions and gaps between salaries of judges and prosecutors²⁴. The Government programme commits to aligning the latter within the budgetary possibilities²⁵ and to creating additional posts for judicial clerks at the ordinary courts²⁶. The proposed budget for 2025 foresees around EUR 4.9 billion funding for the judiciary, including salary increases²⁷.

Digitalisation of justice continues to advance, and the compulsory online publication of judgments has been expanded to the Higher Regional Courts. Digital tools are used widely in civil, commercial and criminal cases by courts and prosecution services. Room for improvement remains with regard to the general use of electronic communication tools by courts and in administrative cases as regards digital solutions to initiate and follow proceedings online²⁸. The 'Justice 3.0' initiative for the fully digital handling of cases in all courts and prosecution services advances steadily, with the aim to reach 90% of the new cases being managed digitally by the end of the year (75% now). The next steps in 2025 will be the piloting and rollout in custody, inheritance and insolvency proceedings²⁹. At the regional administrative courts, though progress is being made, the situation remains more divergent, as most courts use different digital systems³⁰. Following amendments adopted, with effect as of 1 January 2025, the obligation to publish all decisions in the federal legal information system was extended to all legally binding decisions of the Higher Regional Courts; it previously only applied to the Supreme Court³¹. The Federal Bar notes that the courts have access to a broader repository of judgments than lawyers and the public, and can cite them in future decisions, which they consider can impact the equality of arms between the parties³². However, anonymised copies of cited but not published decisions can be obtained by parties upon requests and the decisions must also be subsequently published³³.

A reform of the system of evaluation of judges is being discussed. Earlier attempts to reform evaluations of judges to introduce a more feedback-based system had failed due to the lack of agreement between the Ministry of Justice and the judiciary³⁴. The Ministry has now renewed these efforts based on exchanges with other Member States in the framework of the European Network of Councils for the Judiciary. A meeting was held in March 2025 with all relevant national stakeholders and expertise from the Netherlands³⁵ and further discussions are planned³⁶. The Government programme also includes a commitment to reform the system of evaluation of judges³⁷. As regard administrative courts, some concerns are being raised by stakeholders on the system of performance evaluation of the courts (the so-called internal revision) in view of the role of the executive³⁸. Relevant legislation generally sets out requirements to guarantee judicial independence in the evaluation process³⁹.

Court fees in certain contexts continue to be high and the Constitutional Court found a restriction on access to legal aid in the Administrative Procedural Code to be unconstitutional. The previously reported situation as regards high court fees in certain contexts due to the absence of a cap on court fees remains unchanged⁴⁰. On 1 April 2025, further increases to court fees of around 23% on average entered into force⁴¹. This challenge applies also to the business sector as the absence of a cap on court fees is particularly relevant in high-value cases⁴². In 2024, there was a significant decrease in the income through court fees, due to economic developments in the property market and the temporary suspension of certain registry fees⁴³. The Government programme commits to evaluating court and judicial fees to guarantee access to justice⁴⁴. Furthermore, in October 2024, the Constitutional Court

The suspension of these provisions as of 31 March 2026 is expected to expand access to legal aid in administrative cases in practice⁴⁵. In June 2024, the UN Committee against Torture recommended Austria to ensure that all fundamental safeguards are guaranteed in practice for all detained persons, in particular the right to be assisted by a lawyer and, if applicable, be provided with free legal aid⁴⁶.

Efficiency

The overall efficiency of the justice system remains high, although there is a slight increase in the disposition time for administrative and bribery cases. The average time to resolve litigious civil and commercial cases remains very low (141 days in 2023 compared to 142 days in 2022), also at second (87 days) and third instance (111 days), with a clearance rate at 98%⁴⁷. In administrative cases, the positive trend from previous years has stagnated, with the disposition time increasing (313 days in 2023 compared to 285 days in 2022), the clearance rate decreasing (100% in 2023 in comparison to 112% in 2022), and the backlog remaining high (0.5 per 100 inhabitants in 2023). However, the disposition time in administrative cases at last instance is considerably lower (172 days in 2023). The positive trend regarding the disposition time in bribery cases seems to have reversed, resulting in significantly longer cases (518 days in 2023 in comparison to 164 days in 2022)⁴⁸. Several amendments to the criminal procedure law came into force on 1 January 2025, aiming to increase the efficiency of proceedings, notably by reducing the time limits for preliminary proceedings, further expanding the courts' competence to order the public prosecutor's office to expedite the proceedings, and establishing time limits for expert witnesses⁴⁹. Business stakeholders also consider the efficiency of justice to be very high⁵⁰.

II. ANTI-CORRUPTION FRAMEWORK

The perception among experts, business executives and citizens is that the level of corruption in the public sector remains relatively low. In the 2024 Corruption Perceptions Index by Transparency International, Austria scores 67/100 and ranks 10th in the European Union and 25th globally⁵¹. This perception has significantly increased over the past five years⁵². The 2025 Special Eurobarometer on Corruption shows that 58% of respondents consider corruption widespread in their country (EU average 69%) and 28% of respondents feel personally affected by corruption in their daily lives (EU average 30%). As regards businesses, 55% of companies consider that corruption is widespread (EU average 63%) and 22% consider that corruption is a problem when doing business (EU average 35%). Furthermore, 55% of respondents find that there are enough successful prosecutions to deter people from corrupt practices (EU average 36%), while 40% of companies believe that people and businesses caught for bribing a senior official are appropriately punished (EU average 33%)⁵³.

The National Anti-Corruption Strategy 2023-2025 is currently being implemented. In 2024, the Federal Bureau of Anti-Corruption (BAK) hosted training courses for Federal Ministries as well as under the Integrity Officer Network and through the network of Corruption Prevention Officers. In addition, the BAK produced a booklet addressed to executives on integrity issues⁵⁴. Civil society organisations advocate for a mandatory reporting to Parliament on the implementation of the strategy. Although awareness-raising events were held in 2024 for the general public as well as for the education sector, some stakeholders regret the insufficient information regarding the implementation of the strategy⁵⁵. The first evaluation of the actions under the National Action Plan 2023-2025 is planned to be launched in June 2025⁵⁶.

Investigations in high-level corruption cases continue, while prosecutors still experience intense public scrutiny when dealing with specific cases. Investigations on a number of high-level corruption cases are ongoing⁵⁷. As already noted in previous reports⁵⁸, public scrutiny characterised by a critical narrative in the media remains high, including in relation to individual prosecutors⁵⁹, especially in cases of corruption⁶⁰. Prosecutors also highlight practical concerns in the prosecution of these high-level cases related to security clearance and the length necessary to obtain information required for investigations. Prosecutors still consider that a more clearly framed dialogue with the political sphere and the media could help improve public trust in the work of the prosecution⁶¹. Prosecutors have raised concerns that one of the consequences of the amendments to the Code of Criminal Procedure regulating the seizure of electronic devices, in place since January 2025, could be to impact ⁵² In 2020, the score was 76 while, in 2024, the score is 67. The score significantly increases/decreases when it changes more than five points; improves/deteriorates (changes between 4-5 points); has been relatively stable (changes from 1-3 points) in the last five years.

Like the Federal Action Plan, this second Action Plan in the field of prevention is divided into fields of action: 1. Integrity Management – Promoting Conduct with Integrity; 2. Compliance Management Systems – Public Administration; 3. Reduction of structural corruption risks; 4. Promoting measures to prevent corruption; 5. Raising awareness – public; 6. the effectiveness of investigations including in the anti-corruption field, and would need to be observed over time⁶².

Resources of the prosecution service for anti-corruption remain stable, although they still consider additional posts are needed to address complex cases and burdens related to heavy reporting obligations. In 2024, the Federal Bureau of Anti-Corruption (BAK) detected 83 potential cases of corruption (compared to 66 in 2023), in addition to 769 cases (688 in 2023) relating to allegations of abuse of official authority⁶³. Regarding the outcomes of criminal proceedings against legal persons for corruption offences, since 2023 no cases led to indictments and 10 to discontinuation of investigation proceedings, with no conviction issued so far⁶⁴. As of December 2024, the WKStA has around 200 open investigations; 77 are ongoing large-scale cases⁶⁵. In terms of resources, there has been no change with regards to the number of 47 public prosecutors, and the five additional permanent posts asked in 2024 have not been granted so far. On the other hand, the WKStA has obtained additional resources in supporting staff⁶⁶. A strengthening of law enforcement capacities in IT forensics and in corruption investigations generally is also envisaged under the new Government⁶⁷. Reporting obligations are still particularly heavy for the anti-corruption prosecution (in the cases subject to reporting requirements, the reports in 40% of cases remain pending/under preparation; see also pillar I), weighing on its resources⁶⁸. The resources of the Federal Bureau of Anti-Corruption (BAK) have increased: as of 1 December 2024, the BAK had 174 employees (161 in 2023)⁶⁹. The cooperation between prosecution and the BAK and between prosecution services themselves, including with the EPPO, remains smooth, especially as regards exchange of data⁷⁰.

Limited progress has been made on the recommendation to introduce rules on assets and interests disclosure for Members of Parliament⁷¹. A meeting of the parliamentary groups in May 2025 launched discussions on this matter⁷². At present, Members of Parliament are obliged to declare any income generated by freelance or salaried work and the employer. Nevertheless, these obligations do not include a full range of assets, interests, debts or liabilities⁷³. This lack of disclosure obligations has been the subject of several GRECO recommendations⁷⁴ and is reflected in the current Code of Conduct for Members of both chambers of Parliament, which mostly reiterates existing legal provisions⁷⁵. In addition, this Code of Conduct has been updated and published online in February 2025 in order to take into account the amendments of the law that have taken place in the meantime. The updated version is more comprehensive and also reflects security and data protection instructions⁷⁶. However, no monitoring or sanction mechanisms have been introduced to control the accuracy of voluntary declarations. There are no dedicated rules on accepting and disclosing gifts by Members of Parliament⁷⁷. Discussions on parliamentary groups level took place towards the end of the previous legislative period in order to create the possibility to live-stream sessions of parliamentary investigative committees⁷⁸. Recent media reports suggest that these discussions might be continued during the current legislative period⁷⁹. As a result, limited progress has been made on the recommendations made in the previous years.

Work on an asset declaration system and a Code of Conduct for Ministers as well as new rules for Members of Cabinet is ongoing. A new asset-declaration system is still being drafted by the Federal Chancellery, following the GRECO recommendations⁸⁰. There is no clear timeline for adoption⁸¹. Additionally, a Code of Conduct for Ministers has been prepared in the Federal Chancellery, which would focus on conflicts of interest⁸². The programme of the new Government also includes a Code of Conduct for Cabinet staff⁸³. Furthermore, since 2020, a Code of Conduct for the Prevention of Corruption in the Public Service is also in place, which provides instructions to public service employees and managers on how to deal with bribery attempts, gifts and invitations, lobbying, includes examples of compliant and non-compliant behaviour, and provides guidance on whistleblowing⁸⁴.

There has been no progress on the recommendation to strengthen the lobbying framework, which remains limited in scope⁸⁵. No changes have been made so far to improve the limited scope of the lobbying legislation, which dates back to 2013⁸⁶. The need for reform has been underlined by GRECO⁸⁷, the Court of Audit⁸⁸, and other stakeholders⁸⁹, who consider the existing framework as limited as well as lacking sanctions and control mechanisms⁹⁰. No follow up has been given so far on the recommendations of a working group established in 2020 and overall, no progress has been made on this recommendation made in the previous years.

The overall post-employment framework remains limited. As previously reported⁹¹, revolving doors provisions remain very limited⁹². Beside the specific provisions of Constitutional law⁹³ which excludes former member of Government from certain positions for a period of five years, there is no post-employment restriction for ministers and state secretaries, nor an effective supervision mechanism regarding the rules in place⁹⁴. As reported last year, the 2024 amendment introducing a three-year cooling off period for Members of Government before becoming constitutional judges⁹⁵ represents a limited step forward in creating a revolving doors framework. Stakeholders continue to call for broader rules⁹⁶.

The Court of Audit performed new tasks in line with its extended mandate. Following the amendments to the Political Parties' Act in July 2022, and additional tasks assigned⁹⁷, the Court of Audit (ACA) is carrying out audits of party statements according to the new rules for the first time since the end of 2024 (when the first party statements under the new regime since 2023 were submitted)⁹⁸. The ACA considers that the current staff and budget provisions are sufficient to satisfactorily carry out its tasks⁹⁹.

The establishment of a publicly accessible register of parliamentary groups has strengthened transparency. The bill which amended the Parliamentary Groups Funding Act concerning the establishment of a publicly accessible register of parliamentary groups¹⁰⁰ entered into force in 2023, with some new obligations concerning the public party register being in force since January 2024. The definition of "party affiliated organisation" has been extended in order to broaden the scope of application by including affiliated organisations that support a political party or another affiliated organisation of that party. Civil society acknowledges that the register has strengthened transparency, but has identified loopholes in the current framework regarding the transparency of foreign donations, delays on reporting to the public and advocates for more accountability towards voters in the spending¹⁰¹.

Web-based reporting channels for whistleblowers are reported to function well. Several reporting channels exist in Austria: a web-based reporting channel established by the Federal Ministry of Justice¹⁰² and the BAK's system, which are both operational since 2023. Since it was set up, the Federal Bureau of Anti-Corruption (BAK) has received 147 reports by 31 December 2024. The WKStA manages its own online whistleblower reporting channel already since 2013, which is reported to be working well, with no overlaps with the one from the BAK¹⁰³. A coordination between the existing channel of the WKStA and the one established under the BAK is not in place¹⁰⁴. Some civil society organisations also raise concerns regarding potential conflict of interests coming from leniency measures, currently granted to whistleblowers by the Minister of Justice. Some of them also advocate for a better promotion of these tools¹⁰⁵. Specific trainings are offered to public servants on corruption and integrity, which include whistleblowing tools¹⁰⁶.

Measures to mitigate corruption risks in public procurement, which is still seen as an area at high risk of corruption, continue. Businesses' attitudes towards corruption in the EU shows that 22% of companies in Austria (EU average 25%) think that corruption has prevented them from winning a public tender or a public procurement contract in practice in the last three years¹⁰⁷. 88% of businesses perceive the level of independence of the public procurement review body at federal level¹⁰⁸ (the Federal Administrative Court) as very or fairly good when it is reviewing cases¹⁰⁹. The Single Market and Competitiveness Scoreboard on access to public procurement in Austria reports 28% of single bids for 2023 (EU average 29%). The Austrian Court of Audit (ACA) regularly examines areas with particularly high risks of corruption, with the possibility of follow-up audits to monitor the implementations of its recommendations. The ACA had previously recommended to the federal level to procure more via a central purchasing body, which has been partially implemented¹¹⁰. In addition, the Federal Ministry of Justice is in the planning stage for a project aimed at further developing e-procurement, also with a view of enhancing efficiency and transparency. In 2024, the Austrian Federal Competition Authority, in cooperation with the Federal Bureau of Anti-Corruption (BAK), launched a joint seminar series destined at decision-makers in local governments whose main responsibilities lie in the areas of public procurement law. In parallel, some Regional Courts of Audit also agreed to cooperate more closely with the competition authority to raise awareness of cartel law breaches among contracting authorities¹¹¹. When identifying sectors at high risk of corruption, civil society and the prosecution service still point to the links between some media outlets and the political sphere, especially regarding state advertising¹¹², as well as to the zoning and urban planning sector, particularly at the local level¹¹³.

III. MEDIA PLURALISM AND MEDIA FREEDOM

The media regulator continues to function independently. The independent regulator for audiovisual media services KommAustria and its administrative body, the Austrian Regulatory Authority for Broadcasting and Telecommunications (RTR) continue to operate under a legal framework that safeguard their independence and ensure the transparency of their decisions¹¹⁴. While some stakeholders consider that a lack of fully transparent and objective selection criteria in appointment procedures, and the role of the Federal Chancellor in the oversight structure, as potential risks to the perceived independence of the authority¹¹⁵, the Media Pluralism Monitor (MPM) 2025 confirms a continuously very low risk for the independence and effectiveness of the media authority¹¹⁶. The self-regulatory body for print media, the Austrian Press Council, continued to function independently and handled around 420 complaints in 2024. Its funding was increased by law; however, this increase only accounted for past inflation, and the amount of funding has not been linked to the inflation rate¹¹⁷. As a result, the Austrian Press Council is facing funding problems, which resulted in a minor cut in staff and the relocation to smaller offices¹¹⁸.

Following a Constitutional Court ruling, the rules on the management bodies of the public service broadcaster were amended to increase the independence of these bodies. In October 2023, the Constitutional Court ruled as unconstitutional the composition of the management bodies of the public service media provider Österreichischer Rundfunk (ORF) due to a violation of the requirement of independence¹¹⁹. In March 2025, the Government implemented the ruling through a reform of the ORF Act that reduced the number of members appointed by the Government to the two management bodies and established new qualification criteria for the members of the supervisory body (Stiftungsrat). The members of both management bodies will be newly appointed in June 2025. These reforms may also contribute to aligning the national framework with the requirements of the European Media Freedom Act (EMFA), and the Government is working on further changes to ensure full compliance. Moreover, the household contribution, which provides for a significant part of the ORF budget, is planned to be frozen at the current level until 2029¹²⁰. According to the MPM 2025, independence of public service media did strengthen and currently is at low risk¹²¹.

While funding for quality journalism is having a positive impact, the economic situation of media service providers deteriorates. The overall business environment for media service providers has remained stable¹²². However, the already challenging economic situation of the private media sector is further deteriorating, driven, in particular, by shifts in advertising revenues. The revenue gap between online platforms and the media sector widened in 2024, with online platforms recording a significant growth in their advertising revenue. Against this backdrop, stakeholders reported a positive impact of the funding for quality journalism¹²³. The total funding amount under 2023 law on funding of quality journalism was disbursed in 2024, with 172 out of the 213 applicants receiving funding. An evaluation of the law on funding of quality journalism is planned for 2026¹²⁴. While online media are for the first time eligible for funding, stakeholders reported that only very few online media outlets received it, noting that further professional journalistic criteria, demonstrating quality journalism, should be taken into account for the awarding of funding¹²⁵. According to the MPM 2025, media ownership transparency is at medium-high risk and the plurality of media providers at very high risk¹²⁶.

There has been limited progress on the recommendation on the proper implementation and enforcement of fair distribution of state advertising¹²⁷. The rules governing the award of state advertising which is subject, in particular, to the rules and principles of public procurement¹²⁸ remained unchanged. These rules provide access to advertising contracts also for smaller media service providers. In most cases, the procurement is outsourced to media agencies. The Federal Ministry of Justice intends to send a circular to all contracting authorities, emphasising the need to award contracts in compliance with the public procurement rules before August 2025 when the new state advertising requirements under the EMFA start applying¹²⁹. Stakeholders welcomed the amended Act on the Transparency of Media Cooperation and Funding, in force since January 2024, which strengthened transparency rules for the publication of state advertising contracts of public entities¹³⁰. While these rules are considered to be properly implemented, stakeholders criticised the lack of an effective sanction mechanism in case the award of a state advertising contract violates the rules¹³¹. The Government plans to evaluate the newly adopted law in view of the EMFA requirements¹³². In 2024, reporting indicates that public spending on state advertising more than doubled compared to 2023¹³³. The views of stakeholders diverge on the allocation of state advertising. While some stakeholders viewed the significant share of state advertising awarded to the tabloid press as in line with their relevance and reach in the market, others criticised the current concentration of funding, raising concerns about political proximity between certain media outlets and certain political parties¹³⁴. The large amount of public spending on state advertising has continued to have a strong influence on the media market and is considered a threat to independent journalism¹³⁵. Some stakeholders raised the expectation that the overall amount of state advertising should be reduced, while public funding awarded by transparent and objective criteria should be increased¹³⁶. As the authorities are preparing some further steps to clarify rules on the allocation of state advertising, limited progress has been made on the recommendation.

Preparations for the implementation of the Freedom of Information Act are well underway for the entry into force in September 2025. The Freedom of Information Act will for the first time provide a subjective right to information vis-à-vis public authorities and state-owned enterprises, which was also enshrined in the Constitution. The law consists of two pillars, one regarding the obligation of authorities to actively publish information, the other regarding the right to request information from them¹³⁷. The scope of application for information requests extends also to foundations, funds, institutions and companies subject to the control of the Court of Audit or a provincial court of audit. The implementation of the Act started and is ongoing. The Government is preparing a comprehensive draft law, which will align the legislative framework on federal level to the requirements of the Freedom of Information Act. Training courses and circulars are moreover informing public authorities at all levels about the implementation¹³⁸. In January 2025, the Data Protection Authority published draft guidelines on the evaluation of access to information requests.

Measures continue to address challenges regarding the safety of journalists. The situation regarding the safety of journalists remained challenging¹³⁹. In particular, verbal attacks to discredit journalists or the media coming from politicians were an issue, with the Mapping Media Freedom platform issuing two related alerts since the 2024 Rule of Law Report¹⁴⁰. The Council of Europe Platform to promote the protection of journalism and safety of journalists did not issue new alerts concerning Austria¹⁴¹. The deployment of liaison officers within the police forces continued to help addressing physical altercations at public events¹⁴². The regular information sharing meetings between editors-in-chief of private and ¹⁴² Media liaison officers were established and measures such as contact availability and de-escalation training were introduced. According to the Government, despite the communicated contact options, media liaison public media and the Government have continued, on topics such as training offers. Following a ruling of the Constitutional Court which found that a complete exemption of media outlets from the application of the data protection laws to be unconstitutional, the Data Protection Act was amended and entered into force in July 2024¹⁴³. While broadly welcoming the amended Act which, among other things, strengthens the protection of editorial secrecy, stakeholders reported that the amended law treats differently professional freelance journalists as compared to journalists working for media service providers¹⁴⁴. SLAPPs were not a major issue, with only few cases reported in the last years¹⁴⁵. The Government is working on implementing the SLAPP Directive and set up a working group for that purpose¹⁴⁶. The inclusion of stakeholders in the working group, including from the media sector, was welcomed¹⁴⁷.

IV. OTHER INSTITUTIONAL ISSUES RELATED TO CHECKS AND BALANCES

The Ombudsman Board functions effectively and the nomination procedure for its members is set to be strengthened. The Ombudsman Board (which functions as the National Human Rights Institution and is accredited with A-Status) continues to operate effectively¹⁴⁸. The budget for the Ombudsman Board is expected to remain stable¹⁴⁹. According to the Government programme, the nomination procedure for the three members of the board is expected to be reviewed (while remaining within the existing constitutional framework). In addition, parliamentary hearings for the designated members would be organised¹⁵⁰. This could also respond to a long-standing recommendation of the Sub-Committee for Accreditation of the Global Alliance for National Human Rights Institutions (GANHRI) to review the nomination procedure to ensure full transparency and political independence of the Board¹⁵¹. In 2024, the Ombudsman Board received 23 955 complaints (similar to the level in 2023, where 23 124 complaints were received), out of which 16 458 were deemed admissible¹⁵². As regards other independent authorities involved in the protection of fundamental rights, the Government programme commits to a review and strengthening of the system of Legal Protection Officers¹⁵³.

The Government has committed in its programme to transparency and objectivity with respect to appointments to high-level positions at independent authorities, which remains an area susceptible to politicisation. The Government programme commits to transparent, objective and merit-based appointments for high-level positions for which the Federal Government has the right of proposal. In addition, parliamentary hearings are set to be organised for all designated candidates to become Constitutional Court judges on the basis of proposals submitted by the National Council or the Federal Council and for all designated members of the Federal Government¹⁵⁴. Stakeholders have long criticised the appearance of politicisation in appointment procedures for independent authorities and publicly owned companies, linked to often unjustified lengthy delays and the possibility to deviate from the proposals of selection commissions involved in these procedures¹⁵⁵. During the reporting period, no significant delays in the appointments to such positions have been identified.

Over two thirds of the companies surveyed in Austria express confidence in the effectiveness of investment protection. 72% of companies are very or fairly confident that investments are protected by law and courts¹⁵⁶. Stakeholders confirmed that they do not see an issue with investment protection in Austria. As regards authorities relevant for economic operators, 85% of companies perceive the level of independence of the national competition authority (the Federal Competition Authority) as very or fairly good¹⁵⁷. There are no judicial mechanisms in place at the level of the Supreme Administrative Court to ensure the implementation of administrative court judgments¹⁵⁸.

On 1 January 2025, Austria had 5 leading judgments of the European Court of Human Rights pending implementation, a decrease of 1 compared to the previous year¹⁵⁹. At that time, Austria's rate of leading judgments from the past 10 years that had been implemented was at 72% (compared to 68% in 2024; 28% remained pending), and the average time that the judgments had been pending implementation was 1 year and 11 months (compared to 1 year and 5 months in 2024)¹⁶⁰. The oldest leading judgment, pending implementation for more than three years, concerns the violation of the applicant companies' right to fair civil proceedings¹⁶¹. As regards the respect of payment deadlines, on 31 December 2024 there were 2 cases in total awaiting confirmation of payments (compared to 3 in 2023)¹⁶². On 16 June 2025, the number of leading judgments pending implementation had decreased to 4¹⁶³.

The implementation of the recent reform of the tax framework for civil society organisations has shown positive results. Civic space in Austria continues to be considered as ‘open’¹⁶⁴ and stakeholders generally report that they are sufficiently consulted on draft legislation, though consultation periods can vary in practice¹⁶⁵. The recent reform of the tax framework for non-profit organisations extending the eligibility for tax-exempt status for donations¹⁶⁶ has been complemented by an administrative decree adopted in January 2025, clarifying a number of points. While the competent Ministry expected the number of newly registered organisations to be higher, stakeholders indicate that they consider registration figures to be within their expectations, also linked to the fact that there is an option to register at the level of an umbrella organisation¹⁶⁷. Overall, the new framework is considered to be a clear improvement by stakeholders, in particular as regards the broadening of eligible organisations and the definition of advocacy-related work. Civil society organisations have also broadly welcomed the functioning of the Investigation Office for Allegations of Maltreatment¹⁶⁸ established in 2024, including as regards the participation of civil society organisations in the Office’s independent monitoring committee, though pointing to its lack of independence from the executive¹⁶⁹. Concerning funding, civil society organisations expect the overall context of expected budget cuts to also impact funding available to them¹⁷⁰.
